> Ending note:
> -> Accenture's tech and skills research shows well-known idiom "~~knowledge is power~~" is OVER.
> Knowledge is much more reachable today than yesterday.
> Real power comes from what you can do with the knowledge.

> ->from Gitlab's handbook:
> Don't refer to GitLab as a family. It is great that our team feels like a close-knit group and we should encourage that, as this builds a stronger team. But families and teams are different. Families come together for the relationship and do what is critical to retain it. Teams are assembled for the task and do what is required to complete it. Don't put the relationship above the task. Besides, families don't have an offboarding process. Families should have unconditional love, while teams have conditional love. The best companies are supporters of families.
